KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Trump's approval bump fades: Trump's approval ratings ticked back down as he signed the GOP's One Big Beautiful Bill Act into law over the long weekend, erasing his popularity gains that followed U.S. strikes on Iran's nuclear facilities last month. Our latest survey shows 45% of voters approve of his job performance, down 2 percentage points from last week, and 52% disapprove, a 2-point increase over that time frame. His net approval rating is just shy of a record low we measured two weeks ago and in late April.
- OBBB breaks containment: Roughly half (49%) of voters said they'd seen, read or heard "a lot" about the One Big Beautiful Bill Act, making it the most resonant of a dozen news items tested this week and ranking it among the biggest breakthrough stories of 2025 so far, according to our weekly tracking.

- Trump's approval rating on health care hits record low: Voters are 9 points more likely to disapprove than approve of Trump's handling of health care, 50% to 41%, following media coverage of the GOP megabill's cuts to Medicaid funding. It marks a major reversal since Trump took office, when voters were 9 points more likely to approve than disapprove of his handling of health care.
- Perceptions of Republicans go unchanged after OBBB passage: The popularity of Republicans in Congress is almost identical to where it was before Congress sent Trump his major policy bill, with 41% of voters viewing them favorably and 49% viewing them unfavorably. The same is true for House Speaker Mike Johnson (R-La.) and Senate Majority Leader John Thune (R-S.D.), the latter of whom remains widely unknown even among the GOP base.
- Jeffries gets a small popularity boost: Awareness of House Minority Leader Hakeem Jeffries (D-N.Y.) improved a bit among Democratic voters after his record-setting "magic minute" speech that delayed House Republicans' passage of Trump's bill. Our latest survey shows 51% of Democrats hold favorable views of Jeffries, up from 47% last week, driving a slight boost in his overall favorability rating.
