Methodology

Respondents were recruited through an online, opt-in panel conducted in English. Results were weighted to be representative of Virginia’s active voter population based on age (determined by targeted recruitment), sex, race, education, partisan affiliation, and recalled 2024 presidential vote. A synthetic post-stratification frame was constructed using population benchmarks from 2021/2017 gubernatorial and 2024 presidential election exit poll data. Statistical modeling was employed to account for non-response.

Limitations Acknowledgement

This poll used a nonprobability, opt-in panel. While weighting and statistical modeling were applied to improve representativeness, results should be interpreted with caution when generalizing to the broader population. Furthermore, traditional margins of error do not apply to nonprobability samples; instead, we report credible intervals, which reflect sampling uncertainties and assume the validity of our model. For more information, see AAPOR's statement on credibility intervals.
